OUTWARD BOUND. BY KATE CAMERON. From the shining stand of childhood Ships went salling, long ago, Laden with the righest treasures Which my heart can ever know; Thoughts as pare as morning dew-drops, Fancies like the rainbow gay, Dreams as sweet as fairy amsie, Hones as bline as birds in May But, though I have long been searching.
Youth's lost treasures he'er are found:
And I send forth other ventures. But they are all outward bound

Outward bound, across the ocean, Which so many leagues is spread; Not a ripple on the water Marks the track o'er which they sped. Values wach I for their coming, Values wach I for their coming, Values scan the twelling main, And I four those fairy vessels Will not greet my gaze again. When I call, there is no answer, Kelia only mocks the sound,: Not a sail in the horizon,—

None with tropic fruits appear, From the ist note where Life's noon-tide Makes a summer all the year. Soon the shades of night would gather, Soon Life's sky be overess.
And then, bealing to the feature, I shall have for out the Post. When my bank shall leave the moorings, When I, too on outward bound, to Eternity's calm baren. M. Just treasures shall be found!

TO MY SONS IN VIRGINIA The following lines were written imp y a hady to her sons belonging to the Pal-tetto Guards, now in Virginia:

My children, I have sent thee forth To buttle for the right God give each youthful arm the power He gives to men of might, Auxious will be my throbbing heart At every passing fale, Thy mother's soul shall falter not, Although her check grows pale

My hand upon your bended heads. In discassing I have blid,
And to the righteons Lord of Hosts
This was the prayer I made:
Oh! let my children' gracious God I
Be Thy peculiar care.
Be with them in' the battlefield, Be with them through the war:

Keep from their young and manly forms The scourge, Discose, away; Keen stainless still their house bright, Keep pure their heart. I pray. I did not ask He'd give thee strength All valiant deeds to dare. I felt full well my gallant boys Knew no such word as fear.

Boys I ye have won a high renown: Think of your free born sires; Strike for the mother that gave you kirth, Your native homes and fires! Think of their watchword who assail, Press hard the savage fue, Nor pause until, its stars grown nale Their treacherous flay ties low!

The London Morning Post, Lord Palmerston's organ, asserts that the Southern States were de acto independent at the moment.

Lord Palmerston says, through his London organ, the Post, that Canada will soon become the centre of commerce and emigration for the American continent, and that a domestic army is about to spring from the ground in Canada, not only able to protect the neutrality of the province, but to maintain that balance of power which the folly of Republican America has transferred to British North America.

to St. Petersburg. This lively letter writer proposes six questions, -three n lating to his own country, three relating to England. The fir-t question he is ing,- "What are we fighting for?" Wen are fighting," says Mr. Clay, "for nationality and liberty." We can understand a fight for nationality between die ferent races, but a fight for nationality between men of the same nationality is to us, we candidly confess it, an inex. plicable enigma; nor con we better anlerstand how a people, fighting to put down rebellion, to force their felloweit izens to remain in a Confederacy which they detest, and to submit to institutions which they repudiate, can be called the riously threatened to conquer the North to put down trial by jury, freedom of the press, and representative government the contest might be for Hiberty; but as this is not so, the introduction of such topics is mere rhetorical amplification 'Can you subdue the revolted States' "Of course, we can," says Mr. Chr. So on that point there is no more to be said. "Can you reconstruct the Union when one half of it has conquered the other?" "Nothing easier." Clay. The victim of to-day will become the confederate of to-morrow; the traitors will be east out, and the Union firmer than ever, -witness the happy results of the conquest of Ireland b England, repeated over and again, and dways repeated in vain.

Having answered all the questions which he supposes to be addressed to him by England, Mr. Clay becomes the questioner and asks us where our honor would place us in this contest. Clearly by the side of the Union, because, he says, if slavery be extended in America, it must be restored in the West Indias If any one doubts the force of this demonstration, we are sorry for it, for Mr iner next asks us to consider our interest. Clearly, he says, it is to stand by the Union because they are our best cus tomers, and because, though they have done all they can, since the separation
